

GOOD TO KNOW

● Craigslist is an amazing resource if you live near a major city—and just a cool idea in theory if you don't. Enter kijiji.com, Craigslist for the rest of the country. Kijiji helps people find classified listings near them all across the USA. So now everyone will have access to babysitting services, no-fee real estate, and gently used futons.

● Be prepared for your office's Oscar pool. On Saturday, February 21, select AMC theaters nationwide will show all five of 2008's Best Picture nominees during their Best Picture Showcase. Admission is about $35 and includes snacks. Go to amctheatres.com for participating theaters.

● Feeling charitable but not sure which cause is right for you? Check out razoo.com, which features advice and articles from philanthropic experts, then lets you donate directly to the organization that moves you by searching one of the most comprehensive databases of nonprofits on the Web.

● When the deliciously snarky Jay McCarroll (below) won the first season of Project Runway, he was dubbed the next great American designer. Four years later, he claims his title in the upcoming feature documentary Eleven Minutes—actually 103 fascinating and fabulous minutes following McCarroll's year-long journey of designing, selling, and showing his first "real" collection during New York's fiercely competitive Fashion Week.
